NEWS | POSTED FEBRUARY 21, 2020

Brookings' event: Playful Learning Landscapes: At the intersection of education and placemaking

Posted on behalf of the Brookings Institution

Playful Learning Landscapes: At the intersection of education and placemaking

Brookings Institution, Falk Auditorium
1775 Massachusetts Avenue, NW | Washington D.C. 20036

Wednesday, February 26, 2020

- 8:30 – 9:00am Green Room
- 9:00 – 11:30am Public Event (Falk Auditorium)

Playful Learning Landscapes lies at the intersection of developmental science and transformative placemaking to help urban leaders and practitioners advance and scale evidence-based approaches to create vibrant public spaces that promote learning and generate a sense of community ownership and pride.

On Wednesday, February 26, the Center for Universal Education and the Bass Center for Transformative Placemaking at Brookings will host an event introducing Playful Learning Landscapes, an interdisciplinary project aimed at transforming everyday places into learning experiences and bringing education into public spaces by reaching families in parks, supermarkets, and other places where they regularly go. The event will convene community leaders, city planners, designers, and behavioral scientists that share a vision for creating family-friendly cities across the world.

Join the conversation on Twitter using #LearningLandscapes.

Learn more Register