Formerly known as the Frances Degan Horowitz Millennium Scholars Program (MSP), the initiative was developed in 1999 as a vehicle to encourage and support scholars from under-represented ethnic/racial groups from North America in pursuing graduate work in developmental science. With generous funding from the Wallace Foundation, the Towards 2044: Horowitz Early Career Scholar Program will now extend from a program that takes place only at the Biennial to a more extensive year-long program.

The program takes its name from the year when the adult population of the United States is estimated to become a diverse majority. SRCD is excited to support the professional development of a diverse group of researchers as we move towards this new period.

About the Program

The Towards 2044: Horowitz Early Career Scholar Program provides educational and professional development for scholars, giving them a launching point for a career in the field of child development.

The program offers:

- Mentorship to the selected scholars from more advanced researchers in the field who provide them with guidance and support in their pursuit of educational and professional goals;
- Mentorship service experience for individuals from diverse racial, ethnic, and disciplinary groups;
- Opportunities for scholars from under-represented groups to attend the SRCD Biennial meeting, special pre-conference activities, and a year-long program of monthly seminars and one-on-one meetings with their mentors; and,
- Valuable exposure to the field for scholars from under-represented groups, allowing them to interact not only with their mentors, but also with other scholars and professionals.
